

CONNECTING MEMORIES

Keynote Lecture:

‘Silence as a language of memory: War, revolution and trauma, 1914-1924’

Professor Emeritus Jay Winter
Yale University

Friday, 8th November 2019 at 5pm
Project Room (1.06)
50 George Square, Edinburgh

Focusing on World War I and its impact on the 20th century, Professor Jay Winter's research has explored countless aspects of the relationships between history and memory as well as war and society.

This lecture is a collaboration between Connecting Memories and the Centre for the Study of Modern and Contemporary History, the University of Edinburgh's leading centre for research into the history of the modern world.

Connecting Memories is a collaborative interdisciplinary research initiative opening up a space for previously unconnected scholars working on memory to interact and share their perspectives on what memory means in the context of their research.

For more information and for updates, please visit our website: <http://www.connectingmemories.org/>
You can also follow us on Facebook: <https://www.facebook.com/connectingmemories>
Feel free to get in touch by email: info@connectingmemories.org